

2000 Class Notes Archives

----- From July 2017 AALFNY Newsletter -----

● Sidney Bensimon (LSY: 4eme in 1996) "I was born and raised in Paris, moved to Georgia then California before settling in New York's vibrant Greenpoint neighborhood. After completing my undergraduate degree, I attended the Portfolio Center in Atlanta for photography. My primary focus for the last decade has been editorial and commercial photography concentrating on lifestyle and food which has allowed me to travel the world. I feel lucky to work with inspiring clients that want to have a positive impact in today's world. When not working, I can be found eating ice cream in Brooklyn, walking my 12 year old lab Stella, cooking for friends and dreaming of my next adventure. "

● Vincent Attali (LSY: 2nde in 1998) is the Executive Pastry Chef at LinkedIn. "As a French-American raised in New York City, with a background in graphic design, [he] worked at some of the top pastry shops (Fauchon, Payard, Financier) while attending college. After graduating, he continued on this pathway, working in NYC and Las Vegas in Michelin-starred fine dining restaurants (Daniel, Robuchon) with some of the finest pastry chefs.....Working at the Wynn Resorts under Pierre Gatel in Las Vegas as a pastry chef was an eye opener, based on the sheer volume of quality products made on site for the luxury 5 star hotel. After a few pastry competitions, he came to San Francisco to work at Mourad, 1 Michelin star, to engage diners with varied techniques, visual compositions and above all refreshing flavors. He is looking forward to bringing his combined hotel, pastry shop and restaurant experience to the pastry program at LinkedIn locations in Sunnyvale and San Francisco."

● Walid Hachani (LSY: Terminale in 2000) is the founder of El Tounsi Foods. “Born in Tunisia, Walid grew-up living in many countries (U.A.E., Senegal and U.S.A.) and travelling to many others. As a global nomad and a third culture kid, moving around exposed him to a plethora of foods and cultures. From an early age, Walid would spend hours in the kitchen observing Omi (Mom in Arabic), helping her prep dinner and watching patiently as mouth watering foods simmered on the stove. Omi would challenge him to guess the missing spices as he would taste, taste and taste some more. Food is how home was remembered, food is how each new country was explored and food is how commonalities between people were found. Ever since moving to Canada in the year 2000, his infinite quest for the best Harissa he could find outside of Tunisia carried on, until he decided to make his own. A few years and a couple of dozen batches later, Walid’s homemade Harissa is what inspired the creation of El Tounsi Foods.” (<http://www.eltounsifoods.com/about-us.html>)

Arts before venturing out to explore his lifelong passion for food and cooking. He completed a brief stint at the Institute of Culinary Education and soon after became the head chef of Jack’s Luxury Oyster Bar in New York City at the age of 22. He moved to London the following year, and worked with Heston Blumenthal in the development kitchen at The Fat Duck. Maxime Bilet was more recently the Director of Culinary Arts and Sciences at the Cooking Lab, housed at the Intellectual Ventures Lab in Bellevue, Washington, where he co-authored “Modernist Cuisine: The Art and Science of Cooking” (March 2011) and “Modernist Cuisine at Home” (October 2012). Maxime led the research and development for all projects related to the Cooking Lab, conceptualized the photography and aesthetic of both books, and is the co-inventor on 16 pending patents that resulted from his experiments. In 2012, Forbes included Bilet on their top “30 under 30” list in the food and wine industry. He is currently working on ways to cultivate a better understanding of the ways food connects with the arts and sciences through the events and interactive food exhibits at his culinary arts think tank, Imagine Food, on the Seattle Waterfront." ● Claire Brunel (LSY: Terminale in 2000) is an Assistant Professor at the School of International Service of the American University in Washington D.C. Her “research focuses on policy-relevant issues at the intersection of international trade and environmental economics. She is particularly interested in providing empirical evidence of the links between environmental policies and international competitiveness. Her work includes a study of whether policies of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), encouraging the use and the development of renewable energies, led to an increase in domestic innovation and manufacturing, or rather to a rise in the licensing and importing of foreign technologies ..... Previously, she worked at the Peterson Institute for International Economics, the Research Department of the World Bank, and as trade policy attaché at the Embassy of France. She obtained an M.Phil from Oxford University and a BSc from Georgetown University. Brunel completed her PhD in economics at Georgetown University.” (<https://www.american.edu/sis/news/20150903-SIS-Welcomes-New-Faculty.cfm>)

● Thu-Nhi Nguyen-Petit (LSY: Terminale in 2000) is a 2011 graduate of Columbia University's School of International and Public Affairs (Executive Master in Public Administration, International Economic Policy & Management) and is currently working as the Deputy Director of TREAT TB (International Union Against Tuberculosis and Lung Disease). Her spouse Frederic Petit (LSY: Terminale in 2000) is Vice President (Energy & Infrastructure Group) at Credit Agricole CIB.

● Regina Valdés Montalvá DePaola (LSY: 4eme in 1996) : "Born in the coastal city of Valencia, Spain, Regina moved with her parents to Manhattan at an early age. In 2004, she graduated from The Elliot School of International Affairs at The George Washington University with a B.A. in International Affairs and Political Science. In 2009, she graduated from New York Law School in New York with a J.D. While in law school, Regina advocated on behalf of low-income elderly New Yorkers at Legal Services for the Elderly. She then went on to work at the Litigation Support Unit of Legal Services NYC ..... Before she joined the Law Office of Joseph P. DePaola, she worked as a private tutor teaching law students and preparing them for law school exams ..... At

- Basil Agrocostea told us that he: "attended the Lycee Francais de New York from 1989 to 1996. To his chagrin, he didn't complete his studies at the Lycée alongside his dear classmates. Nonetheless, he credits the beloved institution for developing his intellectual agility and grueling work ethic. He moved his Accounting and Tax office (www.agroaccounting.com) at 49th Street and Madison Avenue this year. Ever the hard worker, he is in the process of starting a real estate investment firm with profits made on a deal in his personal name."

- Evelyne White wrote that she "is happy to be back in NYC after 10 years of moving around Europe and various cities on the East Coast. She's even happier to have taken the entrepreneurial plunge and launched a startup for food-loving globe-trotters.....www.BookaLokal.com, a network that connects [people] to private culinary events hosted by local food entrepreneurs - chefs, local restaurants, supper club hosts - all around the world. Born in Brussels, the network has grown to over 10,000 members in 43 countries.....Evelyne would love to connect with other food lovers and entrepreneurs or old classmates in the NY area. Just email her at evelynecwhite@gmail.com."

- Laura Lehmann "is the founder of website 20to30 [<http://20to30.com/>], a collection of interactive video interviews of global thinkers and shapers speaking about their professional and personal journeys. She seeks to aid our generation's difficulties in forging a life path and balancing one's true passion with a professional vocation, in order to become a go-to resource for wrestling with these existential and universal issues." ● Basil Agrocostea wrote: "It has been many, many years since I have been in touch with anyone from LFNY. Though I did not attend LFNY through premiere/ terminale, I attended it for my first 8 years of schooling -- onzieme through quatrieme. LFNY has had a Profound, with a capital P, impact on my life: I attended it through my young, formative years. I went on to an American, middle-class high school and to a private college in Westchester, and I can tell you the way I think, talk and carry myself is a reflection of my French background to this day. It is a bittersweet thing, truly. Through the years, I have thought much about LFNY and my old classmates. I have Googled LFNY before, and I have seen the school's alumni page..... Many times I wish I had maintained some -- any -- contact with the school and my old friends. To keep things short, my family and I -- my sisters Anne (Anne Helen) ['02] and Gabrielle ['02] were students there too, and my mom Gabriella [Prof. de Sciences Naturelles, 1991-1996] worked at the school....I would love to be in touch with people from LFNY, particularly my old classmates. Perhaps it's too late, as it's been many years and some may view those years as "only grammar school." Yet, it would bring me happiness to connect with LFNY again."

● Christopher Dulac "is a Managing Director of Red Stone Partners, where he is responsible for sourcing, underwriting, structuring, and closing tax-exempt bond, mezzanine and equity investments. [He] is a member of the firm's acquisition and investment management teams. Mr. Dulac received a B.A. in Economics from McGill University. He is based in Red Stone's New York office." (redstoneco.com/)

● Guillaume Xavier-Bender "joined the German Marshall Fund of the USA (GMF) in November 2010. Based in Brussels, he is a Program Officer coordinating programming related to trade, development, and the transatlantic economy. Mr. Xavier-Bender monitors EU policies and politics in relation to the program, and liaises with the economic policy community in Brussels. Prior to joining GMF, he worked for the French Prime Minister's Services in Paris. His range of experience includes EU economic affairs, international trade negotiations, and global and national security. He holds a master's degree in international economic policy from Sciences Po in Paris, a master's degree in diplomacy and strategic negotiations from the Université Paris-Sud XI, and a bachelor's in International Law from the Université Paris II Panthéon-Assas."

She also completed her BA in politics with a minor in environmental studies from Oberlin College." (riversideeurope.com)

- "The head chef at 66 Bistro, Thomas Troisgros, recently picked up the title of best newcomer on the city's dining scene. Given his culinary heritage, the 25-year-old's success is hardly surprising. Thomas is the son of Claude Troisgros, Rio's most celebrated chef and the man behind the helm of uber-chic French restaurant Olympe.....66 Bistro offers classic, sophisticated French dishes at prices that won't have you weeping into your bank statement. Classic Duck A l'Orange is prepared to perfection here, and roast chicken with Dijon mustard is another popular choice. The bistro-style restaurant sits in the leafy, upper-class Jardim Botânico neighborhood, and 66 Bistro is a great spot for lunch or dinner after a visit to the famous botanical gardens." Following graduation, he joined a global management rotational program at Nissan, and moved to Nashville, Tennessee to work in Nissan's Americas Headquarters. Currently, Albert holds the position of Program Manager in the Corporate Planning division. Please contact him if you happen to be in the Nashville area!"

● "Tamara Kummer is currently the spokesperson for the United Nations World Food Programme (WFP) in France. She holds a B.A. from Boston University and a Master of Science from the London School of Economics, both in International Political Economy. Early in her career, Tamara focused on information and communication technologies and their application to international development efforts - particularly for women's empowerment and education in Sub-Sahara Africa. At the Carnegie Corporation of New York, Tamara headed the philanthropic foundation's "Virtual Library Initiative" supporting African university libraries in eight countries. After completing her MSc, she went on to work as the Africa-Middle East analyst for a telecoms consulting firm in London. Later, in Dakar, Tamara joined Courants de Femmes, a French NGO supporting the computer literacy and web visibility of women's associations in West Africa. Previous to joining WFP, Tamara worked as a programme officer in a British NGO, EAP, promoting the corporate social responsibility of gas and mining companies in the developing world." (pimun.eu)

● "Despite the fact that Oberlin alumni have fared splendidly in the corporate world, some liberal arts students and recent grads are convinced that the business world is off limits; they assume recruiters will bypass a job applicant without some type of business major.....Among them was graduating senior Evelyne White-D'Amico, who planned initially to major in environmental studies and harp performance, but then developed an interest in public policy that led her to David Cleeton's class in financial management. (She'd heard it was a practical class that taught about calculating a mortgage and handling student loans.) After connecting with an alum at one of the New York networking events, she successfully pursued a job as an analyst at Bear Stearns. Although some of her friends don't quite understand her attraction to investment banking—or know what it is—most applaud both her ambition and the fact that a program was developed to help her succeed." ● Eric Jabart writes: "I am a senior at the Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, Md, majoring in Biomedical Engineering and Spanish."

● Edouard Langlois étudie le droit à la faculté de Rouen.

● Stephanie LeBlanc wrote, in response to our Networking-reunion invitation of October, 2003: "Je suis toujours très touchée de recevoir des nouvelles du lycée par les newsletters et les emails, et je voulais remercier les organisateurs de l'association. Je ne peux malheureusement pas assister aux cocktails, puisque j'habite désormais en France. Mais je trouve l'idée d'une coopération entre anciens très bien et qui s'avèrera certainement être très profitable pour chacun d'entre nous. Je suis encore étudiante (Sciences Po) et je ne travaille donc pas...."
